The Savary Clan

One of Citrus County's oldest families has roots deep in history

By ESTHER DUNCAN
Chronicle Writer

One of Citrus County's oldest and most distinguished families is the Savary clan whose roots are deep in the history of the county, particularly Inverness.

The founder of the family, Charles Pinckney Savary, arrived here in the early 1880's from Selma, Alabama in a covered wagon drawn by oxen.

"Mama was the dearest, sweetest woman who ever lived," one of the three surviving daughters, Margaret Brannen, recently repeatedly exclaimed about her pioneer mother, Mrs. Savary.

Mrs. Brannen's sister, Mary Clare Cooper, nodded just as enthusiastically. "Oh, she was so good to us."

The two sisters had met at the Inverness home of sister Gladys Carroll to reminisce about their childhood and their beloved pioneer parents who made Citrus County their home and lived to celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary. Mrs. Carroll murmured her agreement of her sisters' appraisal of their mother, calling her an angel.

Also present was Margaret (Monkey) Hagar, the Brannen's popular daughter, who smiled and commented, "You'll think these three hadn't talked in ages once they get started. Why, they talk for two hours on the phone nearly every day."

The Mama the three sisters were talking about was Margaret Saffold White, a remarkable pioneer young woman, also an Alabamian, who arrived about the same time as the founder of the Savary family, Charles Pinckney Savary. Florida was wild and open territory then.

Young Charles met the pretty 15-year-old and a romance blossomed. Savary's pretty bride was just sixteen when the handsome couple was married on April 19, 1882 by Judge Cleve Croft.

DAUGHTERS OF CHARLES SAVARY—Mary Clare Cooper, Gladys Carroll and Margaret Brannen gathered recently to talk about their family's history in Inverness. The three sisters met at Gladys Carroll's home to reminisce about their childhood and their beloved pioneer parents who made Citrus County their home and lived to celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary.

"Yes, and she liked to brag that she gave me my first bath," Mrs. Brannen remembered.

"There's a picture somewhere of Viola riding in a vintage Buick."

Here are the names of the Savary children born to Citrus County's pioneer couple: Besides the three youngest named, there were: Viola (Tooke), Lucy (River), Charlie White, twins Norma and Nita (deceased at six months), Ruby Pinckney (Neville), Joseph, Clarence (deceased at 18 months), and Donald Lee.

Phosphate mining was a means of making a living for many then, the sisters observed. The Savary family moved from Floral City to Dunnellon to Herndon in the summers when school was out to be nearer their father's current mining job.

By this time Savary was superintendent of the Cove Bend Mines and he moved his family of 11 at that time into what was called a landmark mansion on the corner of Osceola and Dampier Streets. Built by W.K. Jackson as a store, it was renovated into a house when phosphate was not found in the area. In no time the lively Savary home was the most popular spot in town.

"Why that house was filled with folks dropping in night and day," Mrs. Brannen said, chuckling. "Everybody was welcome."

The three sisters talked of the wonderful times they had in this much-loved home. The parties and games. The huge porches where they had so much fun.

The Savarys, the sisters stressed, were great believers in children's entertainment centering in the home.

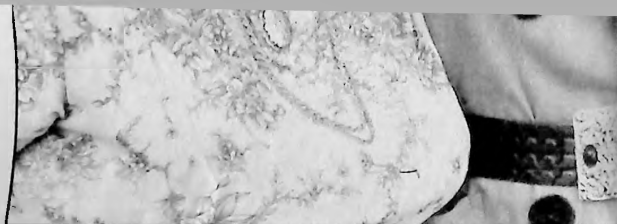

"Remember how we'd roll up the rugs and dance?" one of the sisters asked with an explosion of laughter following.

"It was the first to have indoor plumbing," Mrs. Brannen said. "And the first to have screens on the windows. How well we all remember filling those kerosene lamps." She spoke of the house having two fireplaces and a wood stove for cooking.

The Savarys not only gave par-ters' appraisal of the calling her an angel. Also present was Margaret (Monkey) Hagar, the Brannen's popular daughter, who smiled and commented, "You'll think these three hadn't talked in ages once they get started. Why, they talk for two hours on the phone nearly every day."

minisce about their childhood and their beloved pioneer parents who made Citrus County their home and lived to celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary.

Brannen related. "My father had purchased a log cabin from the Boswells, another pioneer family, near what is now Turner Camp Road."

She said that in those days "it was necessary to prove-up a homestead" by living in it several months out of the year. "The price back then was fifty cents an acre."

According to family tradition the couple intended to lay a wood floor in the cabin, but their first-born, Viola, arrived before they'd completed this project. However, before the next child, Lucy, was born the cabin boasted the first glass windows in the area.

"People came for miles just to look at them," Mrs. Carroll said her parents frequently related.

Mrs. Cooper spoke of her oldest sister, Viola, deceased, saying, "She was always proud that she rode the first train that came to Inverness."

"Yes, and she liked to brag that she gave me my first bath," Mrs. Brannen remembered.

"There's a picture somewhere of Viola riding in a vintage Buick, the first in the community and owned by the Boswells," she added. "I think that was about 1908."

SAVARY HAD MOVED his family into what was called a landmark mansion on the corner of Osceola and Dampier Streets. In no time the lively Savary home was the most popular spot in town. At left is Mary Clare, Margaret and Gladys in 1919.

"piling party at 'the home of and Mrs. W.T. Dampier.' A couple of years after settling in the big house, Savary saw the need for a general merchandise and hardware store and formed a partnership in 1909 with Louis Thompson called Thompson and Savary. The store was successfully operated for years. 'My father sold everything in that store,' Mrs. Brannen recalled. 'It ranged from a quarter of beef to a corset.'

The three sisters recalled the bolts of material that were ordered and on display. The fruit that their mother would order.

'She'd have a standing order for peaches which came down by the barrel by slow train from Georgia,' Mrs. Carroll said. 'I remember the wonderful preserves and pies she made. She never wasted a thing. Even the peelings were used for peach wine.'

They spoke of crocks of brandied peaches. Of an uncle in Selma, Alabama who shipped apples by the barrel. Of flour in 24-pound sacks. Of pineapples ordered from Ft. Pierce. Of making soap. Milking the two Jersey cows. Trips to Shell Island down the Homosassa River for vacations shared with the Warnocks, Lockharts, Hayes and others in rented cottages.

The store had four old rockers to offer friendly comfort to anyone dropping by, the three sisters related. The sisters recalled how their father always kept a big round of rat cheese on hand and would cut a slice for those stopping for a visit.

'Do you remember how Gus Gibbs would chip ice for us when he delivered those 100 pound blocks?' Mrs. Cooper asked.

Did they! They even recalled hearing the sound of the ice wagon being pulled by the old horse through the deep, sandy ruts.

Mrs. Brannen remembered how she loved to come home from school.

'Do you remember how Mother would have a dishpan of doughnuts waiting for us?' she asked. 'There was always enough for all our friends.'

One of the sisters remembered that sometimes their mother would have loads of ginger bread or apple turn-overs waiting. 'She'd have a standing order for apples at the store,' Mrs. Brannen explained. 'We never had a shortage of good food. And then there was the big garden everyone kept.'

Mrs. Cooper recollected that their parents were great card players. 'Why they'd play bridge until 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning. Inverness was a bridge playing town.'

The whole family played some kind of a musical instrument, they said. There was never a shortage of music. Fortunately, an outstanding German woman was then living there who had two grand pianos and was a genius in teaching music.

'Everyone took lessons from her,' Mrs. Brannen said.

Here are brief histories of these three remaining Savary 'girls.' Gladys, who was born in 1904, first saw the light of day in Floral City where she attended a two-story wooden school house. After finishing schools in Inverness, she attended St. Joseph's Academy at St. Augustine.

She then married William Jennings Bowden whose father was sheriff of Citrus County. For five years they lived at the Orange Hotel, now the Crown, then operated by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Malloy. After the death of Mr. Bowden, Gladys lived in Ocala, Jacksonville and Washington, D.C. Later she married Thomas Claude Carroll and lived in Bradenton until his death in 1960.

'My son, William Bowden, Jr.,' she said proudly, 'lives in Melbourne where he's a civil engineer and consultant for Brevard County. They've four lively children.'

One of the three remaining second generation survivors, Margaret, who was born in 1906, attended all 12 grades in the red brick school house on Grace Street in Inverness which is now owned by Citrus Memorial Hospital and known as the Hospital Annex.

After graduating from Citrus High in 1925, she attended Florida State College for Women in Tallahassee winning a degree in Education in 1927. She taught the second grade at Inverness Primary School for 12 years — right in the same room she had attended second grade in the red brick school house her father had helped build.

After her marriage to George Brannen in August of 1937 the couple lived at the Orange Hotel for a number of years.

'We went together for ten years before marrying,' she said. 'George was just getting started in banking and times were tough.'

Mrs. Brannen is one of Citrus County's most prominent and successful bankers as the board chairman of the bank he founded 50 years ago, the Bank of Inverness. The couple has three children: Joe, married to Frances Breckenridge, George II, married to Cindy Morris and Margaret Agnes (Mrs. Thomas L. Hagar).

Mary Clare, the youngest of the three sisters and the baby of the family, was born in 1910 in the big house on Dampier Street so fondly remembered by the sisters. She also attended the red brick school house now owned by Citrus Memorial Hospital and then graduated from Citrus High School on Main Street. She continued her education at Hatton's Business School in Tampa, then returning to Inverness where she was employed as a bookkeeper at Dixon's Ford Motor Company.

She married Wallace Cooper, the Ford dealer, and the couple had three children.

'Do you remember all those wonderful days we spent fishing on the banks of Lake Tsala Apopka? And the Withlacoochee River?' Mrs. Cooper asked. 'Our parents were so wonderful about taking us everywhere. In those days people went places as a family.'

Tales Of The Savarys - A Continuing Saga

By SHEILA JONES
C-P-S Staff Writer

Much of Citrus County's colorful heritage has been seen through the clear blue eyes of Viola Savary Tooke, the eldest of 12 children, whose family helped carve this area out of wilderness.

Viola Savary Tooke will turn 90 July 26, at which time virtually all her remaining brothers and sisters, and all those upon whose lives she has touched in her nine decades, will gather at the Florida Power Lounge, Inverness from 3 to 5 p.m..

A "second mother" to her brothers and sisters, Mrs. Tooke said she gave her sister Margaret (Mrs. George Brannen) "her very first bath", which marked the beginning a life filled with midwifing, and child rearing and more. She and her husband, James Wilbur Tooke had no children in their 19 years of marriage, and Mrs. Tooke, said "We never had the time, there too many other $25 per month, and had to "teach everything" in a one-room school. "There wasn't even a graded school here until 1922," Mrs. Tooke said.

Following attending her "normals" the blonde-haired, blue-eyed Mrs. Tooke stayed home to care for her mother for the next several years, and following a 7-year courtship, married "Mr. Tooke". It was on leap year, she said, and she and her husband joked about "it taking us two leap years to get married."

The Tooke family were Floral City pioneers, with their namesake still near the old homestead, one of a few near the Savary's.

County; big political rallies and barbeques; Citrus County's first automobile, and much, much more.

She is a charter member of the Eastern Star, and a past matron, and boasts also of reading the Citrus County Chronicle "all its life."

Prior to the name change, the county paper was called "Phosphate Field" and Albert Williamson was editor.

Included among those who are sponsoring the birthday party for Mrs. Tooke, who they all affectionately call "Sister" are: Mrs. Brannen, Mrs. T.C. Carroll (the former Gladys Savary), of Winter Park; Mrs. Wallace (Mary Claire) Cooper,

She and her husband, James Wilbur Tooke had no children in their 19 years of marriage, and Mrs. Tooke, said "We never had the time, there too many other things to do," then chuckled.

Mrs. Tooke's parents were some of the first Citrus county homesteaders, and she was born when the town was still called Tompkinsville.

Her father was a phosphate miner, and the family literally moved to the mines during the summer of her youth when school was out, and it could be anywhere from Floral City to Dunnellon to Hernando, she said.

"Mother always sent us to school," Mrs. Tooke said, adding that not only did she complete 12 years of school, but also finished two "normals".

Aspiring to be a teacher, she said she was discouraged because her father disapproved of it. "I went as far as you could go in school," Mrs. Tooke said.

When it came time for her to teach (she said her father wouldn't hear of it,) she found that teachers were being paid

The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Viola S. Tooke will honor her with a party celebrating her 90th birthday at the Florida Power Lounge on Friday, July 26 from 3 to 5 p.m. All relatives and friends are invited.

Migrating from Alabama, the Savarys had heard about homesteads in the area, and made their way to Gainesville, and D.L. Savary, all of Inverness.

along with many of their friends, including the Spiveys and others, to the land office, when Citrus County was still Hernando county, just after the Civil War.

Citrus was the big industry then, and virtually everyone worked the groves, until the big freeze of 1904 and 1905, which virtually destroyed everything.

Viola's father C.P. Savary, married the former Margaret Saphold White, who, too, had just arrived from Alabama, and the newlyweds moved to his log cabin, which was then located near what is now Turner Camp Road.

At that time, it was necessary to "prove-up" a homestead by living in it several months out of the year. The cabin had a dirt floor, and the young couple intended to complete a new home before their firstborn, Viola, came into the world.

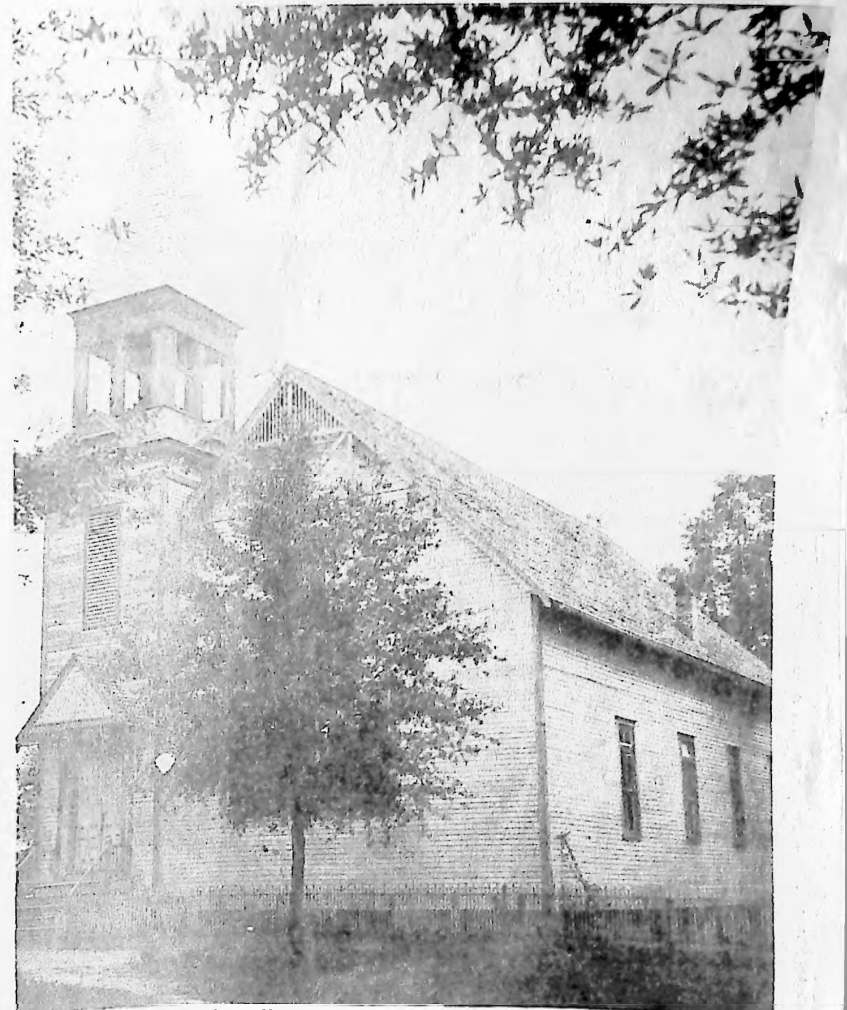

Unfortunately, the work wasn't complete, and so to speak, little Viola came bouncing into the world, weighing 12.5 pounds, in a log cabin with a dirt floor.

When the new home was built, before Viola's sister Lucy was born, it boasted of the first glass windows ever placed in a home in the area. "People came from miles just to look at them," Mrs. Tooke said.

She has many, many tales to tell of early life when Citrus County was rough and wild, like the days when phosphate prospectors were thought to be "crazy," the night the Citrus County courthouse was moved to Inverness; square dances, church gatherings, the railroad's coming to town; the changing of the name to Citrus

Wyatt guilty, but of lesser murder charge

By CHARLIE GOFEN
Times Staff Writer

TAMPA — Calvin Wyatt was convicted Wednesday night of third-degree murder in the 1986 stabbing death of former Hillsborough and Citrus school administrator Roger Weaver.

The verdict marked a defeat for the prosecution, which had asked that Wyatt, 20, be convicted of first-degree murder.

an Donerly conceded at the start of the trial that Wyatt killed Weaver. But Donerly asked the six-member jury to convict his client only of third-degree murder on the basis that the killing was not premeditated.

"Lived justly, loved mercy and walked humbly with his God."

to burglarize it, he could be convicted of first-degree murder on the basis that he was responsible for Weaver's death during the course of a felony.

But if Wyatt did not intend to commit burglary and was only trespassing, he might avoid a conviction for first-degree murder.

Doctors said Wyatt was suffering from paranoid schizophrenia and some form of mental illness, probably a psychosis.

But in January they determined he was competent to stand trial. Tampa psychiatrists Melvyn Jack Gardner and Daniel J. Sprehe said that Wyatt was uncooperative and withdrawn but was sane and in touch with reality.
